Dear Peter,

I called John Baxter who works in the referenced Bighorn Archaeological Consultants and/ after confirming the reference in the letter was to the cement irrigation ditch built ~1961-1965

I called on his referral to Chris Merrit in the Utah Historic Preservation Office.

I recall my grandparents discussing and the pride they felt in building this "new " irrigation ditch.

I recall them discussing the financial sacrifice being made to build it but that it would conserve water.

To make a long story short, there is a cement irrigation ditch running along the east side of our property down the southern third and traverses the entrance that has been used by Faux for his heavy mining equipment.

(It continues into his property a few feet.)

Faux is aware of the irrigation ditch as we looked at it together.

I was not aware until reviewing your correspondence that this was eligible for registry the National Historic Registry.

(Faux would have been given the dates on the letter.)

Furthermore, Faux (et al) removed a cement irrigation ditch from the south end of his property.

(Again he would have known given the dates on letters this was of archaeological importance. I have photographs of this.)

Mr. Merrit mention he was going to call you.

Please inform me as to your thoughts. I can forward photographs of cement irrigation ditch removal if needed.

Thanks for your work.

Regards,

Sue

Hi Sue,

Sure. You are welcome. See the attached outgoing correspondence from our files.

An alternative to this is to check our online files at: <http://linux1.ogm.utah.gov/WebStuff/wwwroot/minerals/mineralsfilesbypermit.php?S0390034>

You will need a username and password, which are both "ogmguest".

Peter-

I mentioned your comments to my friend who took the photos.

She commented that the mud tracks from heavy equipment come out of my property and go north on Highway 117.

I have observed the same.

This is most unusual agricultural equipment from my point of view.

Thanks so much for your time and professional expertise.

Regards,

Sue
